1 Types of meeting

Match the meetings on the left with their purposes on the right.

1. a job interview	a. communicate with remote workers
2. an annual general meeting	b. discuss an employee's performance
3. a teleconference	c. elect the company board of directors in a publicly-owned corporation
4. an appraisal meeting	d. recruit a new employee
5. a team-building meeting	e. solve problems, make decisions, set policy
6. a management meeting	f. strengthen relationships between colleagues and resolve conflicts

In which type of meeting would you hear each of the following statements or questions?

1. "Why do you want to work for this company?"
2. "We seem to be breaking up. Is everything all right with your connection?"
3. "What can I do to improve my performance rating?"
4. "I think we really need to start cutting costs."
5. "So, let's review last year's financial results."

What type of meetings do you have in your business?

2 Collocations with 'meeting'

Complete the sentences with the following verbs.

attend call cancel end hold reschedule

1. I think we need to _____ a meeting to discuss the issue.
2. I can't make it on Friday. Can we _____ the meeting?
3. Are you going to _____ tomorrow's meeting? Everybody is coming.
4. HR managers usually _____ job interviews with potential candidates.
5. It was getting late, so the boss decided to _____ the meeting.
6. Everybody in the office was on sick leave, so the manager decided to _____ the meeting.

In pairs, discuss the questions below.

1. How often do you attend meetings?
2. Who is responsible for calling meetings in your company?
3. Why would you reschedule a meeting?
4. Have you ever cancelled a meeting? Why?

3 Meeting problems and solutions

Study the meeting problems and match the underlined words to the definitions below.

1. Things are behind schedule.
2. A few participants are dominating the meeting.
3. Meetings are often used to deal with immediate problems.
4. Key people don't attend.
5. People don't follow through on action plans, tasks and decisions after the meeting ends.
6. The participants are getting side-tracked.

a. controlling
b. discussing issues that are not relevant
c. do or complete something that was planned or discussed
d. important
e. taking longer than planned
f. try to solve

Now study the solutions below and match them to the problems.

1. Invite opinions from quiet individuals in private.
2. Go back to the original question or re-state the purpose of the meeting.
3. Make sure to include at least one item for discussion that focuses on something strategically important, but not urgent.
4. If meetings are only used for announcements and information sharing, there may be better ways to share the information (e.g. email). In this way, meetings will seem worth attending.
5. Place topics that require more discussion at the very beginning of the agenda.
6. Provide written action plans – people usually need to see in writing what action is required of them and by when.

Stay connected
Be smart with what you eat and drink
Fight jet lag

THE INDEPENDENT

The Business of travel: How to get the perfect long-haul routine

Adapted from the Independent

1. If you are clever about how you pack, plan, and eat it can make a big difference, says international businessman and author Marco Robinson.
2. When you're exhausted, your sleep pattern is irregular because of travelling through different time zones, and you're often living out of a suitcase, which can make international business feel even more stressful. For many of us business travel is necessary, but if you do a few simple things to make the process easier you will enjoy the benefits.

_____ 1

3. Pack as little as possible, take carry-on luggage and pack a small, clear toiletries bag so it is ready to go, rather than preparing it each time you travel. This will allow you to get through security quickly when you arrive at the airport and avoid baggage reclaim. Also, high quality luggage is a good investment. It doesn't have to be made by a designer, it just has to be strong and practical to prevent problems.

_____ 2

4. A traveller who doesn't get enough sleep will not be well prepared to do international business. Someone who is rested and relaxed will do much better. Arrive at your destination a couple of days before and give your body time to adjust. If this is not an option, reset your watch to the new time zone before you leave, and try to fix your sleeping pattern so it works in your destination. Once you have arrived, do not sleep unless it is dark outside - even though you might be very tired.

_____ 3

5. If you eat too much when you are flying, you will feel tired and full. If you are offered a lot of food try not to eat it all, and avoid carbohydrates. It is much better to wait and have a good meal at your destination. If you don't drink enough water it can be a big problem when flying because of the low humidity levels in the plane's cabin. So that you don't get things such as headaches and dry eyes, drink plenty of water and avoid tea, coffee and alcohol.

_____ 4

6. A broadband USB stick will give you an internet connection anywhere for a monthly payment, so you can do business as usual when you are travelling. This means you don't have to get different log-ins and passwords when you connect to airport wi-fi. It might be a bit more expensive but it is much more convenient.

_____ 5

7. Being sensitive to cultural differences is vital to make sure a foreign business trip goes well. To avoid feeling embarrassed, spend time learning about a region's religions, customs and politics.
8. And a few last, brief tips...
9. Wear shoes without laces so security don't stop you. Do some exercises on the plane so you don't get cramps and always wipe your tray table as they usually aren't cleaned.

1st August 2016, by Marco Robinson

4 Checking Understanding

Read the article again and put true (T) of false (F) next to the following sentences.

1. When you buy good quality luggage for flying it should be a designer brand.
2. You should arrive a few days in advance of your meeting to allow your body to get used to the new time zone.
3. Not drinking enough water on the plane is a problem because it is usually very hot.
4. Using airport Wi-Fi or your own mobile's internet are not the only ways to get an internet signal in an airport.
5. You should use something to clean your tray table as it might be dirty.

4. a blue collar worker	d. a period of time that you are allowed to take off work because you have a health problem
5. sick leave	e. a person who does 'mental' work, for example in an office, rather than physical work
6. house arrest	f. being a prisoner in your own house, rather than in a prison
7. discrimination	g. unfair treatment of different categories of people or things, for example men and women, young people and old people

3 Find the information

You are going to read an article about a new labour law proposed in Belgium. Under the new law, employees who call in sick are required to stay at home for a medical check-up. Read the article below and answer the questions.

1. Under the new proposal, why are employees who take sick leave required to stay at home for a medical check-up?
2. When exactly do employees who call in sick have to be at home?
3. What happens if someone is not at home during that time?
4. At present, what happens to manual workers who take sick leave?
5. How will this change under the new proposal?
6. Why are unions against the proposal?
7. In the UK, how many bosses do not believe employees when they call in sick?

THE INDEPENDENT

Thinking of calling in sick? The doctor will come to see you, under new Belgian proposal.

Adapted from The Independent

by CHARLOTTE MCDONALD-GIBSON, SUNDAY 06 OCTOBER 2013

1. Calling in sick with a hangover or to enjoy unexpected good weather may soon be more difficult in Belgium – the government has proposed a law which would require employees who take a sick day to stay at home for a medical check-up.
2. The proposal would oblige people to remain at home for a four-hour time period between 7am and 8pm for a visit from a doctor to confirm their reported health problems.
3. If the person who called in sick was not at home, they could lose their pay for that day, Belgian media reported.
4. The proposed rule is part of a change in labour laws which are different for blue and white collar workers.
5. At present, people who work in manual jobs are not paid for their first day of sick leave.
6. That rule would be abolished under the new laws, but unions said that the proposal was unacceptable and they compared it to house arrest.
7. "We can't agree with such a violation of personal privacy," said Jan Vercamst of the union ACLVB. "People claim that blue-collar workers call in sick on a Monday more than white-collar workers. We want to end all discrimination, but we cannot accept this."
8. Although employers in the UK can't send the doctor to employees' homes, a study earlier this year by a private healthcare company found that six in 10 bosses in Britain do not believe employees when they call in sick.

4 Synonyms

Read the text and find a synonym for ...

1. examination (P.1) _____

BAD DEBT

Scan to review worksheet

Expemo code:
18LA-157A-MRHB

1 Warm up

What is 'bad debt'? Does your business sometimes suffer from bad debt? If so, how?

2 Vocabulary - Key words

Match the underlined words to their definitions below.

1. Our debtors owe us a lot of money.
2. He was able to get the loan because he owns a lot of personal assets.
3. During the economic downturn, many businesses were unable to survive.
4. If Joe is unable to pay his debts, he will go bust.
5. Because of the boycott from consumers, the company's sales went down.
6. Sometimes big companies bully smaller companies to get what they want because they know smaller companies are weaker.
7. Big firms usually have plenty of cash reserves, so they usually don't have problems paying bills.

a. a person or company who owes money
b. a reduction in the success of a business or economy
c. a supply of something that is not needed for immediate use but available if required
d. go bankrupt
e. property owned by a person
f. refusing to buy from a company or country as a way of protesting
g. use their strength to influence other people

3 Find the information

You are going to read an article about how bad debt is affecting small businesses in the UK and what can be done about the problem. Read the first five paragraphs and complete the statements.

1. _____ per cent of small businesses say that late payments are a major issue.
2. Small businesses were owed _____ in late payments.
3. _____ in five companies go bust because of bad debt.
4. _____ in five companies have refused to do business with late payers.

THE INDEPENDENT

Beating the late payers

New research suggests that many companies are getting tough with late payers.

Adapted from The Independent, by David Prosser, 28 January 2013

1. How do small and medium-sized enterprises deal with persistent late payers that damage their cashflow and make it difficult to survive?
2. There is no doubt that late payments continue to be a problem – 85 per cent of small businesses say it has been a major issue over the past two years, while nearly half say their most consistently difficult debtors are paying late three times a year or more. According to the payments organisation, Bacs, small businesses in the UK were owed £36bn in late payments.
3. We know how difficult late payments can be. Data suggests that one in five small businesses go bust because of bad debt. And business owners that survive often have to use their own funds or borrow against their personal assets, while waiting for payment.
4. There are some things that business can do to protect themselves – conducting credit checks on customers, chasing bad debts more efficiently, or demanding payment upfront. But the problem still exists and has got steadily worse during this economic downturn.
5. We may soon see a new stage in the war, however. Many companies are now simply refusing to do business with their most persistent late payers. One in five companies say that over the past year they have refused to do business with customers who have paid late in the past.
6. This is the extreme option, of course. But in the end, if a customer is prepared to do financial damage to a business by repeatedly not paying their bills on time, what other choices do owners have?
7. If more small businesses take this approach, it is likely to be more effective – especially if they work together. A customer that knows its business won't be accepted anywhere if it fails to pay on time is much more likely to be a timely payer.

   It's a small world out there. In many industries, small businesses know their competitors and their customers very well. By working with each other, they can produce a "blacklist" of customers who won't settle their bills.
8. This could work with smaller customers. Bigger businesses, however, are less likely to feel threatened by a boycott from one sector or area of the country.
9. If the campaign is organised effectively, however, it should be possible to take on even the largest organisations.
10. For small businesses, the culture of late payments creates two problems: firstly, they are more likely to be treated poorly because bullying the small guy is the easy option. Secondly, they are less likely to have the cash reserves needed to cope with the situation. And if customers pay your business late, it becomes harder to settle your own bills on time.

11. By working together, however, small businesses can take much more aggressive action, and they should not hesitate to do that. The late payments cycle is damaging everybody's business – as well as the wider economy.

4 Phrases from the text

What can small businesses do to cope with late payments? Read paragraphs 3-5 again and complete the phrases below with the infinitive form of verbs from the text:

1. conduct credit checks on customers
2. _____ against personal assets
3. _____ bad debts more efficiently
4. _____ payment upfront
5. _____ to do business with customers who have paid late in the past

Which of these actions do you think are more effective?

5 Checking understanding

Read the rest of the article and put 'T' (True) or 'F' (False) next to the statements below. Explain why the false statements are wrong.

1. Small businesses can deal with the problem of late payments more effectively if they work together.
2. Most small businesses cannot know which of their customers are likely to be late payers.
3. Boycotts work well for all types of customers.
4. It is impossible to beat the largest organisations.
5. Large companies are more likely to treat small companies badly.
6. Small companies often do not have the cash reserves to cope with bad debt.
7. Late payments are only damaging to small businesses.

6 Find the word

Find a word or phrase in the text which means:

1. not soft (adjective, SUBTITLE) _____
2. continuing to behave in a certain way, stubborn (adjective, P1) _____
3. not late (two-word phrase, P6) _____
4. at the right time (adjective, P7) _____
5. deal with, manage (phrasal verb, P10) _____
6. pay what you owe (verb, P10) _____
7. pause before you do something, often because you are uncertain or nervous about it (verb, P11) _____

7 Chasing payments

Look at the four emails. Put them in order from 1 (least aggressive) to 4 (most aggressive).

Email 1

Hi John,
Payment still hasn't been made for invoice 33. I attached another copy with my payment details.
Just to remind you - if payment is not received within 30 days, I reserve the right to add late payment charges to your account.

6. Case study: Nike

Everyone recognizes the famous "swoosh" logo, visible on all Nike products. It was designed by Carolyn Davidson, a graphic design student and bought for the price of $35. Years later, the company is now worth billions of dollars. Nike was first known as Blue Ribbon Sports (BRS), and was founded by University of Oregon track athlete Phil Knight and his coach, Bill Bowman, on January 25th, 1964. They sold 1,300 pairs of shoes during their first year of business operating as a distributor for a Japanese company. They made $8,000. By 1965 they had a full-time employee and sales reached $20,000. Nike is now the world's leading sporting goods brand. In 2017 its revenue was $36 billion and each year growth is around 5-6%. So what makes Nike so successful as a brand? Many experts think that it's all in the marketing. In 2017 the company spent $3.34 billion on marketing. Nike often promotes their products using celebrities as well as professional and college athletes with sponsorship deals. The company also invested in marketing much earlier than their competitors. Nike sells a lifestyle, focusing on the "emotional benefits" of their products for the consumer. Their advertisements often don't mention their products, but are aimed at inspiring the consumer to live healthier and find their own "greatness". Their slogan - "just do it" - is simple, effective, and can be understood by everyone. Nike is constantly trying innovative things with their products. They made shoes lighter and stronger, and replaced foam with air bags. They also developed a shoe that has laces that tie themselves automatically when you put your foot in the heel. Nike has a large variety of products across different sports. In addition to clothing and sports equipment, they also sell watches, apps, backpacks and many other items. Nike also owns several other brands, like Converse. As they offer more products to more people in more markets, they're able to capture a far greater market share. Nike launched their website in 1999, seven years before Adidas started theirs. They were also one of the first companies to use social media.

3. Chairing a meeting

CHAIRMAN: Right, if everyone is ready, we can start. Firstly, I'd like to thank you all for coming at such short notice. Does everyone know Mr Lee? Mr Lee is our representative in South East Asia.

MR LEE: Good afternoon everyone. I've been looking forward to this meeting.

CHAIRMAN: Right then. As you all know, we are here today to discuss the proposed investment project in Vietnam. You can see from the agenda the different issues that we need to look at. So, let's move on to the first item - location. Adam, would you like to start us off?

ADAM: Well, at the moment, there are two sites worth looking at the Amata industrial park located nearby Ho Chi Minh City in the south of the country and one site located in the area surrounding the capital Hanoi in the north. The main advantages of the first option are better, more developed infrastructure and lower land rent.

CHAIRMAN: What's your view on that, Anne?

ANNE: I agree that the higher level of infrastructure in the south must be taken into account, which is why most foreign companies have decided to invest there. However, I think the north also has potential.

CHAIRMAN: Can you be a little more specific?

ANNE: Well, the cost of labour is lower there and workers in the north of the country are regarded as more motivated and hard-working than in the south.

CHAIRMAN: Does everyone agree with Anne's point of view?

MR LEE: I definitely think we should consider alternatives to the south.

CHAIRMAN: What other options can we look at?

MR LEE: There is also the industrial zone surrounding Danang, Vietnam's third largest city in the centre of the country. This location offers several advantages it has a modern airport, a port facility as well as cheaper and more available labour than in the south. The city Danang is also located at the eastern end of a planned infrastructure project that will link Vietnam with its neighbouring countries in order to open up investment channels.

CHAIRMAN: Interesting. What does the city itself offer to our management team who are going to live out there?

MR LEE: Well, the city seems to have great potential there. It is extremely clean and has some excellent beaches and pleasant riverside areas. It is also surrounded by historical sites and national parks. What's more, it is still free from all the commercialisation and crowds of tourists in the south.

CHAIRMAN: What's your reaction to that, Adam?

ADAM: It is definitely worth investigating. This site might well offer us the right balance of good infrastructure and cheaper cost of labour.

ANNE: Yes, I agree.

CHAIRMAN: Right, just to summarise the discussion so far. We all agree that Danang is worth serious consideration as a potential site. Let's come back to this issue later because I want to move on to the next item on the agenda ...

2. Describing a company

Toyota

Toyota Motor Corporation is a multinational corporation headquartered in Japan and is currently the World's second-largest automotive manufacturer. It achieved an annual turnover of over $270 billion in 2018. In 1937, Toyota was founded by Kiichiro Toyoda as an independent company dedicated to the production of automobiles. In 1957, the manufacturer exported the first Japanese car to the United States, and established American and Brazilian divisions. The company expanded in the 1960s with a new research and development facility and established a worldwide presence by the 1970s. Today, the company owns the brands Lexus and Scion and has shareholdings in Daihatsu Motors, Isuzu Motors, and Yamaha Motors. It operates 608 subsidiaries and has a workforce of over 370,000 people.

Inditex

Inditex is the biggest fashion group and clothing retailer in the world. The company owns well-known brands such as Zara, Pull and Bear, Massimo Dutti, Oysho and Stradivarius. Inditex was founded in Spain in 1975. Its founder, Amancio Ortega Gaona, is the richest man in Spain and one of the richest men in the world. Today, the group runs over 7,420 retail stores worldwide and employs over 174,000 people. Inditex designs and manufactures almost everything by itself and new designs are delivered twice a week to Zara stores around the world. This adds up to more than 10 thousand new designs each year! In 2018, Inditex made a profit of 3.4 billion euros.

4. Describing your job

Anthony Smart

My name's Anthony Smart. I'm the chief accountant for Xcel Systems. I'm responsible for cash flow, credit control, preparing financial statements, accounting reports and so on. On the whole, I enjoy my work - I've always enjoyed working with numbers. I also like the company culture and the people here at Xcel - it's a very friendly and supportive work environment. One task I don't quite like is chasing money from late payers. That can be rather unpleasant sometimes.

Daniel Goldman

My name's Daniel Goldman and I'm the managing director of Xcel Systems. I'm responsible for the day-to-day running of the business including managing projects, organising people's work, dealing with suppliers and important customers. I'm also in charge of developing the company's long-term strategy. What I like most about my work is the responsibility, the challenge and of course the salary. I also really enjoy motivating and inspiring other people to achieve their goals and develop the company. The part I don't really like is the long hours. It's not uncommon for me to spend 12 hours in the office, which doesn't leave me much time for my family. On top of that, my job can get pretty stressful at times, especially when we have problems with our suppliers.

Susan Clarke

My name's Susan Clarke. I work for Xcel Systems as a human resources manager. My responsibilities include recruiting new employees and organising training for company staff. It's also my job to improve the company's working conditions. I find my work very interesting mainly because I enjoy working with people. It's also very satisfying to see employees improve and develop their skills because of initiatives that I have put into practice. What I don't like so much is when I have to deal with a difficult employee - for example, somebody who is habitually late, takes too many days off or doesn't meet deadlines. That can be rather stressful. But luckily, it doesn't happen too often.

COMPLAINING AND APOLOGIZING

Scan to review worksheet

Expemo code:
18LA-3579-S8U2

1 Warm-up

Read the following text. How far would you agree with the points raised? Have you experienced the situations described below from the point of view of a customer or business?

CUSTOMER COMPLAINTS

A guide for small businesses

Many business people regard a customer complaint as a negative experience. However, if your business handles complaints properly, previously unhappy customers may start singing your praises. Consider a complaint as one of the best opportunities you have to show your commitment to creating another satisfied customer. Customer loyalty is one of the biggest assets a business has; fight for this loyalty - be passionate about it!

Complaints should be handled sympathetically and promptly. Some businesses believe that if they don't receive many complaints, their customers must be satisfied. Wrong! Only a few customers will complain to you. The majority will not return to your business and will tell others of their bad experience.

WHY SHOULD YOUR BUSINESS WELCOME COMPLAINTS?

Some published statistics say that:

- a typical business hears from only 4% of its dissatisfied customers; the other 96% just go quietly away and 91% of them will never come back;
- a typical dissatisfied customer tells more than 8 people about his or her problem;
- 7 out of 10 complaining customers will do business with you again if you resolve the complaint favourably.

HANDLING COMPLAINTS

Try putting the following points into practice:

- Set up a complaints handling system and train your staff to handle complaints well;
- Make it easy for customers to lodge a complaint;
- Welcome customer complaints and deal with complaints promptly.

Adapted from a Consumer Affairs Factsheet by the Australian Department of Justice Northern Territory Government.

Find words and phrases in the text which mean:

1. take action in order to solve a problem (two synonyms): _____
2. showing your approval (idiom): _____
3. willingness to give your time and energy to something (noun): _____
4. useful qualities or advantages (plural noun): _____
5. repeatedly purchasing goods or services from one company; not changing for another company (phrase): _____
6. immediately (adverb): _____
7. not satisfied (adjective): _____
8. to your advantage (adverb): _____
9. make an official complaint (phrase): _____

2 Typical complaints

Look at the following typical complaints. Match them to the possible excuses/reasons on the right:

1. damaged goods	a. a delay at the border
2. goods never arrived	b. a lost invoice
3. a late delivery	c. a missing order

DIALOGUE 1

A: I'm afraid we have a problem with your latest delivery. It arrived three days late again ...

B: I'm very sorry about that. I'm afraid our driver was delayed at the border.

A: Well, this is about the tenth time that this has happened this year and we are not satisfied. If this problem is not resolved, I'm afraid we will have to consider changing supplier.

B: I understand. Leave it with me. I will look into the matter and do what I can to make sure it doesn't happen again.

A: Thank you. I really hope we can sort this out.

DIALOGUE 2

A: Hello Jane. I'm calling because we have a problem with our order.

B: Oh, what seems to be the problem? Didn't you receive all the goods you ordered?

A: Well, we received everything, but some of the goods are damaged.

B: I'm sorry to hear that. In what way are they damaged?

A: Well, the casing on some of the television sets seems to be cracked.

B: Oh, I am very sorry. This has never happened before. It must be due to bad handling. If you send us back the damaged sets, we'll send you replacements immediately and give you a discount on your next order.

A: Thanks a lot.

B: I apologize again for any inconvenience caused. If you have any more problems, please let me know.

DIALOGUE 3

A: Hello, John. I'm calling about a mistake on our invoice. It looks like you have overcharged us by £50.

B: I'm sorry about this. Our Account's Department must have made a small mistake when they processed your order. We'll issue a corrected invoice immediately.

A: I tell you what. Could you just subtract the extra amount from the next invoice?

B: Certainly. I apologize again for the mistake.

A: It's all right. Have a nice day.

DIALOGUE 4

A: Can I have a word with the manager, please?

B: Yes, that's me. How can I help you?

A: Well, I just want to complain about the lack of customer service here. I just can't find anyone to help me choose a laptop.

B: Yes, I'm very sorry madam. We are rather short-staffed at the moment. Please wait here and I'll find someone to help you.

McDonald's sues Florence for $20m after city refuses restaurant application

Reports say that McDonald's is furious after it was stopped from opening a branch next to the historic cathedral

Adapted from the Independent by Ben Kentish, 8 November 2016

1. McDonald's is suing the Italian city of Florence after it was refused a licence to open a new restaurant in the city's historic central square.
2. The US company wants almost $20m (about £16m) because its application for the new restaurant in the Piazza del Duomo was rejected. The square is visited by a large number of people every year and is the home of the 800-year-old Duomo cathedral.
3. The application was declined because of new rules that aim to protect the city's historic centre. The city wants to slow down the increase in number of fast food restaurants. Any new restaurants in the area that are allowed must use "typical products" from the city or the surrounding region of Tuscany.
4. The Mayor of Florence, Dario Nardello, turned down McDonald's application in June. The decision to deny permission to open the restaurant was approved last month by people responsible for protecting Florence's ancient heart.
5. Mr Nardello told the city council: "McDonald's has the right to submit an application because this is permitted under the law, but we also have the right to say no."
6. He said he wanted to support "traditional business" in the area.
7. Mr Nardello added that they were not against McDonald's, saying that the company have many restaurants in other parts of the city.
8. McDonald's are angry at the decision because it promised to make big changes to the way it works to obey Florence's new rules. It now wants the court to help with the problem.
9. The Piazza del Duomo (Cathedral Square) is a world-famous tourist destination with examples of Gothic and Renaissance architecture. Buildings in the square include the Santa Maria del Fiore cathedral with its impressive dome, the Giotto bell tower and the St John Baptistery.
10. There are already four McDonald's branches that are five minutes walk from the square.
11. It is not the first time that McDonald's plans to open a branch in a historic location have annoyed local people.
12. Last month, Catholic priests criticised the chain's proposals to open a restaurant next to Saint Peter's Square in the Vatican.
13. Cardinal Elio Sgreccia told an Italian newspaper that the decision by McDonald's to open this restaurant was controversial, and it would look out of place in the square.

8.	posture	h.	when employees are not at work when they should be

3 Reading

Read the article 'Corporate well-being' about the different health initiatives that the UK company i-to-i has experimented with. Answer the following questions:

1. Why is a healthy workforce good for business?
2. What happens on 'Fruity Friday'? Is this initiative a complete success? Why/why not?
3. What did i-to-i give its staff as a reward? Why did they stop it?
4. Why did the firm cancel the Tai Chi classes?
5. What was the 'Caledonian Challenge'?
6. Why was the 14-mile hike more popular than the Caledonian Challenge?
7. Which key areas does the firm want to focus its health initiatives on?

THE INDEPENDENT

Corporate well-being

A firm that offers travel opportunities wants to expand the health horizons of its employees.

1. A healthy workforce is good for business. Apart from reducing absenteeism, there is increasing evidence that suggests a connection between good performance and employees who are in good condition. The Harvard Medical School recently found that the most healthy 25% of a workforce are seven hours more productive per week than the least healthy 25%.
2. I-to-i is one of a growing number of companies that is trying to improve the well-being of its staff. But, also like many firms, not everything is working.
3. "You could say we're a company full of good intentions, but things often prevent us from doing exercise or eating what we should," says Sarah Horner, public relations manager of the organisation, which provides opportunities for volunteer travel and training for TEFL (Teaching English as a Foreign Language). "We would like advice on what we can do to encourage all our 50 employees in our UK office to become really healthy."
4. The company has already experimented with a few strategies. "About six months ago, we introduced an initiative called 'Fruity Friday', which means all employees get free fruit on that day," explains Ms Horner. "It's become really popular: when the fruit arrives, people are informed online and, almost immediately, they're off to the kitchen to get some. The problem is that in the rest of the week, we consume enormous amounts of sweets and biscuits."
5. At least staff at i-to-i are eating less bad food than they used to. "At one stage we had a box full of chocolate, which seemed like a really nice way to reward staff. But it was almost too successful, and people were picking from it all the time. In the end, some staff members actually asked for it to be removed because they couldn't resist temptation," she adds.
6. The firm has also tried introducing weekly Tai Chi classes to relieve stress and improve well-being. "But they were arranged before work and unfortunately they had to be cancelled because not enough people could attend. Some travel long distances so they couldn't get here early enough. I wanted to attend, but couldn't because of the time of the classes."
7. Rather more successful was the Caledonian Challenge, which a fifth of the staff recently undertook. "You walk 54 miles (86.4 kilometres) in Scotland, through the night," explains Ms Horner. "We also arranged a 14-mile (22.4 km) hike recently, which we did for the charity we support, and even more people did that - probably because it was far less challenging. Nevertheless, it was still under half the workforce."
8. Above all, i-to-i would like to know what measures it can introduce on a daily basis, as well as on occasions, to get staff feeling their best. It would prefer to concentrate them in three key areas - eating, exercise and stress release - and it would like the initiatives to be long-term where possible.

4. Listening

Dr Frankie Phillips, registered dietitian, The British Dietetic Association

Changing bad habits is hard, but making the healthy choice easier is one solution. 'Fruity Friday' is a great initiative, but why only on a Friday if it is so popular? It's surprising how well fruits like grapes, strawberries and mini tomatoes, and dried fruits like raisins and sultanas, go down as a replacement for biscuits - even in a meeting. So i-to-i could introduce them daily as a fruity break. This can be an economical option if the firm asks a local supplier for seasonal fruits. And why not have a tomato-growing competition in the office? Others have. Coffee and tea in moderation are not as dehydrating as people often think, but I'd also recommend providing water as dehydration can affect our ability to concentrate. If the firm invests in a water cooler, it should place it at the far end of the office, so that staff have to take a mini-break to get a drink.

Neil Adams, managing director, Neil Adams Corporate Health

Lunch-time activities such as a walking club will encourage employees to take a break from their desks, helping to relax tired limbs and reduce eye strain and stress levels. Give staff a large exercise ball to sit on at their desks, instead of a chair - building up slowly to 15 to 30 minutes each day. This will improve posture, breathing technique and encourage the flow of oxygen to the brain. To help replace bad habits with good, make space for health promotion items on your bulletin boards and hold monthly seminars on stress management, food and nutrition. And keep employees motivated by providing them with a wall planner to plot their health routine and list their accomplishments.

1 Warm up

Read the following definition.

> ethics – the rules a company uses to decide how it behaves in various situations.

Using a dictionary, complete the following sentences with a word from the same family as the word in the definition.

1. She was fired from her job because of the _____ way she had treated the customers.
2. Simon received a promotion because he is respected by his colleagues and always behaves _____ in his work.
3. I found out the company experiments on animals so I stopped buying their products for _____ reasons.

In pairs, discuss what you would do in the following situations.

1. You notice a colleague in the office spending a couple of hours online shopping during the work day.
2. You know that one of the people on the sales team has charged a customer more for the product they bought than it actually cost.
3. Your male manager always invites a female colleague out for lunch, but not anyone else in the team. You think he is paying for the lunches with company money.

- What should you include in a code of ethics?
- Which businesses are unethical?
- Why is a code of ethics important?
- What is business ethics?
- How do you make sure the code of ethics is being followed?

Business and ethics

The ethics of running a business

A. _____

If you visit the website of any reasonably sized company, you will find a statement of their code of ethics. These are essentially principles that cover all of the multiple relationships within that business, this is: how their employees should conduct themselves and behave with each other; how the company will treat its customers and other businesses; and how they are responsible to the society in which they operate. This code includes very important areas such as human rights, the company's environmental policy, the labour rights of its workers, and what it does to prevent corruption.

B. _____

Having a clear document setting out the guidelines in all of the above areas communicates to the staff, customers and the public the moral view of the company. All too often, businesses can be seen as faceless, money-making factories. The code of ethics shows the company's social values. It also helps the company to regulate the working practices of its staff and their decision-making processes, as well as create a positive culture which can be a very important factor in avoiding legal action against them. A good code of ethics is not there to restrict its employees, but rather to make sure that everyone is treated equally. The code should help employee relationships by actively building trust in each other and the way the company operates. It should also increase a sense of respect for each other and the customers they work with. Fairness is also vital and a company needs to apply the rules to everyone, whatever their position within the business. Lastly, the code should also build a sense of caring, making employees feel as though their needs are being met and their opinions and difficulties are understood.

C. _____

Of course, it's not possible to control exactly how each employee behaves. It is possible though to do a number of things that can encourage all members of staff to comply with the code. Firstly, you can use it as the basis for training, creating situations where staff are able to consider the impact of their decisions and how poor ones can badly affect individuals and the company as a whole. Provide time and space for employees to talk about the issues which affect them and how they may have been treated poorly previously, allowing workers to learn from each other. Another area to look at is how your company rewards workers. Look at areas such as promotion, pay increases and commission, thinking carefully about who gets these and asking yourself if it is something that is available to all employees and if the way you give these rewards could encourage unethical behaviour. Finally, make sure that you have a system for people who feel they are being treated badly to speak to someone other than their manager and that people who have a problem to report can trust that it will not negatively affect them in future.

7. _____ control how much of something is allowed (v, para. B)
8. _____ follow a rule or demand (v, para. C)

4 Reading comprehension

Complete the summary with one, two, or three words from the article on page two.

Any company with a significant number of employees will have a code of ethics which looks at the relationship between employees and to _____[1], as well as personal conduct. The code covers vital areas including worker's rights, environmental responsibilities as well as general _____[2]. The code demonstrates the _____[3] and puts a human face on its public image. It should encourage employees by _____[4], both in their colleagues and the company itself, by letting them know that they will be treated with respect and _____[5], regardless of their status within the organisation. Training can use the code of ethics by asking employees to think about _____[6] of their actions on others. It can also give them a chance to discuss situations in the past when they were _____[7] and allow them to learn from one another's experiences. Companies should also consider whether their reward systems for employees may increase _____[8] and create a system where problems can be reported to someone other than a direct manager.

5. Are there any companies you would not work for because of your principles? Who are they and why wouldn't you work for them?

9 Extended activity/Homework

Imagine you have your own company. Write a list of rules you would want to include on your code of ethics.

Consider the following questions:

- How do you want employees to behave?
- How will you make sure everyone is treated equally?
- What will you do to make sure you are giving back to the society you are a part of?
- What will happen if there is a problem with an employee's behaviour?
- What will employees do if there's a problem with the way their manager is treating them?

You should:

- Write at least 150 words.
- Check your grammar, spelling and punctuation.

6. Listening for general details

Speaker 1: I'm an area manager for the Co-operative Group which is based in Manchester in the UK. I manage 24 supermarkets for them, but they do a lot more than just retail. I'm really happy to work for them as they are a very ethical business. We've already made 80% of the packaging we use easy to recycle and are working on increasing that percentage. We've been leaders in Fairtrade for years which makes sure that farmers get a fair price, that the food we grow is sustainable, and that everyone in the supply chain is able to work in safe working conditions. We've made sure that our products are not tested on animals for almost three decades now and the company is also committed to paying a fair rate of tax to make sure that the country benefits from our success. Last year, we made a revenue of £12 billion which shows that you can be ethical and make a profit.

Speaker 2: I work with Afflac an insurance company based in Georgia in the United States. We've just been recognised by Ethisphere, which is an organisation that promotes ethical and sustainable practices, for the 16th year in a row. They invest a lot of money in training staff in ethics. Diversity is very important within the company. Their employment policy has resulted in 64% of the people on the board being women and people from ethnic minorities. We also do a lot for the environment, having given $252 million last year to green development, renewable energy and aiding people in poorer communities with the infrastructure needed to improve their lives. Over the years, we have also donated a total of $172 million to children with cancer both here in the US and in Japan. I think that it's unusual for a financial company to give back to the community in this way. And yet it helps us to profit. Last year, we had a revenue of over $22 billion.

7. restrict
8. comply

4. Reading comprehension

10 mins.

Ask students to read more carefully and complete the summary with one, two, or three consecutive words from the article.

1. society
2. human rights
3. company's social values
4. building trust
5. fairness
6. the impact
7. treated poorly
8. unethical behaviour

5. Focus on vocabulary

5 mins.

Ensure students can correctly pronounce target language. Ask them to complete the task unaided in the first instance, but allow them to use a reference later if needed.

1. → g.
2. → f.
3. → a.
4. → b.
5. → c.
6. → d.
7. → e.

10 mins.

This exercise helps students put the target vocabulary in context and gives them a chance to practise using the vocabulary in conversation.

1. minority
2. supply chain
3. renewable
4. infrastructure
5. packaging
6. Diversity
7. sustainable

Part C

Ask students to discuss the questions in pairs or small groups. Circulate and help as needed.

6. Listening for general details

5 mins.

Ask students to listen to the audio and write down the numbers they hear next to the information.

a. 24
b. 80
c. 12 billion
d. 16
e. 64
f. 172 million
g. 22 million

7. Listening comprehension

5 mins.

Ask students to complete the exercise after the first listening, then listen again to check their answers.

1. True. 'I'm an area manager for the Co-operative Group which is based in Manchester in the UK.'
2. False. 'I manage 24 supermarkets for them, but they do a lot more than just retail.'
3. True. 'We've been leaders in Fairtrade for years which makes sure that ... everyone in the supply chain is able to work in safe working conditions.'
4. False. 'Last year, we made a revenue of £12 billion which shows that you can be ethical and make a profit.'
5. False. 'They invest a lot of money in training staff in ethics.'
6. False. 'We also do a lot for the environment, having given $252 million last year to green development, renewable energy and aiding people in poorer communities with the infrastructure needed to improve their lives.'
7. True. 'I think that it's unusual for a financial company to give back to the community in this way. And yet it helps us to profit. Last year, we had a revenue of over $22 billion.'

8. Talking point

10 mins.

Ask students to discuss the questions in pairs or small groups. Circulate and help as needed.

9. Extended activity/Homework

30 mins+.

Ask students to plan, write and edit their code of ethics. You may want students to work in pairs or small groups to complete this and compare lists as a class. Point out that students aren't expected to write a detailed code, but produce some main rules that they think should be followed. Ensure you give students feedback on their work.

FINANCIAL STATEMENTS

1 Financial statements

Complete the text below with the following words.

~~financial statements~~ intangible assets balance sheet profit and loss tangible assets liabilities

For a business enterprise, all the relevant financial information is presented in a structured format that is easy to understand. These are called financial statements. There are several important financial statements.

A _____[2] shows a company's financial position. It includes assets (anything that a company owns and which can be converted into cash) and _____[3] (a company's debts and financial obligations). Assets can be physical things (_____[4]), for example machines and property, or things which are not physical in nature (_____[5]), for example a company's reputation.

A _____[6] statement (also called an income statement in the US) is a financial statement which summarizes the revenues, costs and expenses incurred during a specific period of time - usually a fiscal quarter or year.

2 The balance sheet

Match the balance sheet items on the left to their definitions on the right:

1. accounts receivable	a. borrowed money which the company must pay back within a year
2. prepaid expenses	b. costs paid in advance such as rent and interest
3. accounts payable	c. intangible assets like a company's brand name and established relationships with its suppliers
4. stock (UK) / inventory (US)	d. the goods and materials that a business holds for the purpose of resale
5. plant and equipment	e. the money a company has received from outside investors for its shares
6. share capital (UK) / capital stock (US)	f. the money owed by a business to its suppliers
7. goodwill	g. the money owed to a business by its clients
8. short-term debt	h. what a company owns and uses to produce goods, such as a factory and machinery

1. Tangible assets: _____

2. Intangible assets: _____

3. Liabilities: _____

What items are on your company's balance sheet?

3 The profit and loss statement

Look at the 2007-2008 profit and loss statement for the American footwear company Zappos and complete the definitions on the next page.

Zappos Profit And Loss Statement

Zappos Profit And Loss Statement: 2007 - 2008

Ad to Sales Ratio	11.4%	10.0%
Gross Profit Percentage	35.2%	36.6%
EBIT as a % of Net Sales	4.0%	2.9%

1. _____ the company's total income before deducting expenses
2. _____ the total cost of manufacturing the company's products
3. _____ how much money the company has left after it has paid the costs of doing business
4. _____ the costs of doing business (also called 'overheads')
5. _____ how much money the company has left after it has paid the costs of doing business as well as taxes and other financial charges
6. _____ the company's profit margin before paying the operating costs and taxes

4 Talking point

Discuss any of the questions below.

1. Does your business have high overheads?
2. What is your company's gross profit percentage? Is it increasing or decreasing?
3. Is income tax high in your country? Are there any tax breaks for small companies?
4. Does your business invest a lot of money in marketing? Which methods of marketing?
5. Who are your company's major shareholders?
6. How important are a company's intangible assets?

Key

1. Financial statements

2. balance sheet
3. liabilities
4. tangible assets
5. intangible assets
6. profit and loss

2. The balance sheet

1. g 2. b 3. f 4. d 5. h 6. e 7. c 8. a

NOTE: 'Share capital' is considered to be a liability because it belongs to outside investors is not owned by the company. 'Prepaid expenses' and 'accounts receivable' are considered to be tangible assets because although they are not physical items, they represent cash, which is regarded as tangible.

TANGIBLE ASSETS: accounts receivable, prepaid expenses, stock/inventory, plant and equipment
INTANGIBLE ASSETS: goodwill
LIABILITIES: accounts payable, share capital, short-term debt

3. The profit and loss statement

NOTE: Financial accounting terms can be confusing since the same words or phrases may have slightly different interpretations in various countries, and a number of different terms can have practically the same meaning. The Zappos profit and loss statement uses one set of terms. However, a number of nearly equivalent phrases can be found in other statements, for example cost of revenues/cost of sales, gross profit percentage/gross profit margin, income from operations/operating income/operating earnings, net income/net profit after taxes.

EBIT in the last line stands for 'earnings before interest and taxes'. It can also be called operating profit or operating income, and it is a measure of a firm's profit that excludes interest and income tax expenses.

The objective of this exercise is not to teach an exhaustive and confusing list of English accounting terms, but rather to get the students to interpret a profit and loss statement and provide a few terms that will help them to discuss financial statements in English.

1. net revenues
2. cost of revenues
3. income from operations
4. operating expenses
5. net income
6. gross profit percentage

4. Talking point

Have the students discuss any of the questions that are specific to their line of work or business. Alternatively, ask your own accounting questions.

2 Reading

According to studies, more people in the UK are becoming freelancers. Tick six possible reasons below and read the article on the next page to check your answers.

- ☐ It's becoming more difficult to find jobs with employers.
- ☐ It's becoming easier to find freelance work on the internet.
- ☐ Freelance work is more stable than before.
- ☐ Demand for freelancers is getting bigger.
- ☐ Nowadays, you don't need to invest too much money to be a freelancer.
- ☐ Freelancers are more satisfied with their work than employed people.
- ☐ Freelancers earn more money than employed people.
- ☐ Freelancers pay less tax than employed people.

THE INDEPENDENT

Half the workforce could be freelance soon, but ministers haven't noticed.

Adapted from The Independent, by David Prosser, 29 June 2015

1. One in two people could become freelancers within five years. That's the prediction of PeoplePerHour, an online platform that matches people who offer small jobs with freelancers who can do the jobs. It says that more than 50 per cent of working people will do some kind of freelance work, even if some of them also have a day job.
2. According to the Office for National Statistics, 15 per cent of workers in the UK are self-employed, which is the highest level in 40 years. According to other studies, the figure is even higher.
3. It's easy to explain the higher number of self-employed people in recent years. Many freelancers want to have jobs with employers, but they are unable to find them. But there are other reasons too. Platforms such as PeoplePerHour make it easier for freelancers to get work. This means that being self-employed is not so unstable any more. The availability of broadband and cloud-computing solutions make it easier for people in many professions to work for themselves with little upfront investment.
4. In this new age, buyers want their products or services immediately - but large corporations are often unable to offer this kind of flexibility. Agile freelance workers are able to instantly meet customers' needs - or, if they can't, those customers will find someone who can.
5. At the same time, purchasers are breaking up the work they require into small, specialised parts, and looking for experts who can do the different jobs. These changing working patterns will increase the demand for freelance and self-employed workers. And because of that, the number of freelancers will probably rise.
6. Studies show that self-employed workers are more satisfied than employed workers. According to a survey last year, 84 per cent of self-employed people were happier with their jobs (although many of them earned less than employed people). They said this is because they can choose their own time and place of work.
7. However, the government is ignoring this large and growing part of the workforce. It talks about support for small and medium-sized businesses, but never about the needs of freelancers or self-employed people. This is a problem for freelancers. They often have to deal with complicated employment regulations and pay extra taxes. If half of the working population is going to work freelance within five years, the government will need to listen to their needs.

3 Talking point

Is freelancing popular in your country?

4 Checking understanding

Put T (True) or F (False) next to each statement below.

1. More than 50% of working people will become full-time freelancers within 5 years.
2. Freelancers are able to respond to customers' needs more quickly than large corporations.
3. Employed workers have more choice about their place of work.
4. The UK government is trying to help freelancers and self-employed people.
5. Employed people have fewer problems with regulations and taxes.

5 Collocations

Match the verbs to the nouns to form phrases from the text.

1.	do	a.	a job
2.	work	b.	customers' needs
3.	meet	c.	freelance
4.	earn	d.	money
5.	deal with	e.	regulations
6.	pay	f.	taxes

Now complete the sentences below. Then in pairs, ask and answer the questions.

1. Which typical jobs do freelancers _____ in your country?
2. Do you prefer to work for an employer or work _____ ?
3. How does your business _____ customers' needs?
4. Is it easy to _____ money as a freelancer in your country?
5. Do people in your country _____ a lot of taxes?
6. Do self-employed people have to _____ a lot of regulations in your country?

6 Grammar - Making predictions

Study the box below.

We can use going to + infinitive and will + infinitive to say something that you think or know about the future:

More than 50 per cent of working people will do some kind of freelance work.

Half of the working population is going to work freelance within five years.

There is a small difference between going to and will. We often use going to + infinitive to make a prediction because of something that we see or know now. There is a present feeling that a future event will happen:

The boss looks angry. I think he's going to shout at somebody.

We often prefer to use will + infinitive to make a prediction when there is no present feeling that the event will happen:

In the future, I think people won't write emails anymore.

In many cases, both going to and will can be used interchangeably.

7 Practice

Complete the predictions with the verbs in the correct form. Sometimes both 'will' and 'going to' are possible.

1. I think the company will hire/is going to hire (hire) a new marketing manager.
2. In 50 years' time, I think everybody _____ (have) internet access.
3. The customer looks very happy. I think he _____ (sign) the contract.
4. I think Simon _____ (have) a good career in sales.
5. Look at those clouds. It _____ (rain).
6. Look at the time! We _____ (be) late.
7. Experts believe that the economy _____ (improve) in the next year.
8. I think I _____ (go) to another restaurant for lunch tomrrow.
9. Who do you think _____ (get) the job?
10. Do you think that most people _____ (become) freelancers in the future?

8 Make your own predictions

Complete the 5 predictions below with your own ideas.

1. Next week, ...
2. Next year, ...
3. In five years' time, ...
4. In ten years' time, ...
5. In 100 years' time, ...

1 Warm up

In pairs, discuss the following questions.

1. What habits do you have?
2. What have you been successful with in your job?
3. Which people do you admire for their success?

2 Skimming for gist

Read the following titles and match them to paragraphs A – D. There are more titles than paragraphs.

Headings	Paragraph: A / B / C / D / not given
(1) How they might help
(2) Habits of the rich and famous
(3) What not to do
(4) The industry for personal success
(5) Statistics of success
(6) Why they are attractive

Can success be learnt?

Habits for success

A. Visit the business section of any bookshop and you will find yourself presented with a sea of titles claiming to give you the secret to success. With over 25 million copies sold, Stephen R Covey's The 7 Habits of Highly Successful People is one of the most successful, but it is certainly not alone. For the majority of people, habits are something that are usually thought of in a negative light, whether it's overeating, or smoking, or the need for coffee throughout the working day. Within the pages of these books though, habits are presented as a pathway to achievement for the average Joe.

B. Perhaps unsurprisingly, the rich and famous adopt certain methods in their work which they believe to be helpful. The famous writer, Charles Dickens, for example, ensured that he slept pointing North, believing this to be the secret to his ability to produce timeless classics such as Oliver Twist and A Christmas Carol. Another example is Beethoven, who insisted that his coffee was made with precisely 60 beans, having great expectations for its ability to power him through the process of composing over 700 pieces of music throughout his lifetime. In the modern-day, Bill Gates, is said to move backwards and forwards in his chair while thinking which he says helps him focus. Ariana Huffington has a ritual of removing all electronic devices from her bedroom each night to help her focus on sleep – the key, she believes, to her creativity.

C. Why is it though that these habits are something that ordinary people wish to copy? One factor is that we have a very high regard for people who we see as successful. We mistake what they do for the reason they are successful. For instance, although movement might help Bill Gates think, he's clearly very intelligent in whatever he does while he considers his decisions. Copying what he does isn't going to be the magic solution to earning his salary, as nice as the idea may be.

D. This isn't to say that learning useful habits is a waste of time. Rituals to motivate a team to win are well-known in sport. The New Zealand All Blacks famously preform The Haka before each Rugby game, a war dance that they have done for over 100 years to intimidate the other team. Rafa Nadal is known for wearing his socks at a height of 15 cm and sitting in front of two water bottles, one cooled, one not, before each tennis match. Studies have shown that, even though these habits don't predict success, they put players in a positive frame of mind which does increase the chance of success. So, any habits that you follow with a focus on doing a job well, if you believe them to help, may well do so.

6. _____ the positive way you think of someone (n, para. C)
7. _____ make someone feel scared or unsafe (v, para. D)
8. _____ the way you are thinking and feeling (n, para. D)

4 Reading comprehension

Complete the following sentences with one, two or three words from the article on page two.

1. There are any number of books you can find that will claim that there is a magic _____.
2. Although we usually have _____ view of habits, these books often give ideas for creating productive habits.
3. While writing his _____, Charles Dickens would always make sure he faced North while sleeping.
4. Bill Gates believes it's easier for him to _____ if he's rocking back and forth in his chair while he thinks.
5. Arianna Huffington improves her sleep by taking _____ out of her room ahead of sleeping each night.
6. We often confuse what successful do for _____ why they are successful.
7. You can't _____ based on people's habits according to research.
8. If habits help you to _____ that you will be successful, then you probably will be.

5 Focus on phrasal verbs

Part A: Complete the following phrasal verbs and definitions by writing in the correct word from the box. Some words from the box will be used more than once.

around / on / back / off / for / by

1. thrive _____ – to get energy from or be successful at a particular, often difficult, situation

8. Speaker 2 wants to be more successful than other people they work with. _____

8 Talking point

In pairs, discuss the following questions.

1. What do you think about Speaker 1's advice? Do you think you could do what they do to be successful? Why/why not?
2. What do you think about Speaker 2's advice? Have you tried doing what they do? Why/why not?
3. What useful habits would you advise people to develop in order to be successful?
4. What is your idea of 'success'? What will you be doing when you are 'successful' in your opinion?

9 Extended activity/Homework

Write an email to your younger self giving them advice about what they should do to be successful and avoid the problems you have had in your career.

Consider the following questions:

- What did you want to do when you first started working?
- What mistakes did you make?
- What could you have done to make life easier for yourself when you were younger?
- What have you learned about working that you didn't know then?

You should:

- Write at least 200 words.
- Check your grammar, spelling and punctuation.

6. Listening for details

Speaker 1: I thrive on the energy I have first thing in the morning. When it's quiet and no one else is around is when I'm at my best. If I need to, I will wake up at 4 am to start work, but I never get up later than 5. What I achieve early in the morning is what eggs me on for the rest of the day. At the weekend, I will use that time for exercise instead of work. I can always sleep later if I need to, but those early hours are a gift each day which are not to be missed. When I'm presented with problems, I focus on how to get round them. I try not to look at the obstacle too much. If you're skiing through a forest and you look at the trees, you'll hit the trees. If you focus on the path through them, you'll find your way past them. It's the same idea. Of course, I have my failures from time to time, but I always look at what I can learn from that, whether it's about myself, my job or the industry I work in. There's always a lesson and by learning it, you can quickly bounce back from any upsets.

Speaker 2: I always ensure that I have a goal I'm going for. Each evening, I write down what I've done that day to get closer to it, and what I'm going to do the next day. There was a period of time in my twenties when I was just watching life go by and I realised I was really unhappy. I didn't feel as though I had any control. I started to ask myself what it was that I wanted to achieve and wrote down a plan. That plan is what motivates me and it was when I started to be more mindful about my life is when my career really started to take off. I was quite surprised with how quickly I started to get things done once I thought about it and my approach really started to pay off. After a few successes, I started to wonder what else I could do if I really wanted to. Not everything I do works, but I make sure I'm always trying new things and don't get complacent about the success I have. I'm competitive, but my competition is me. I have a version of me in my head that is doing the best I can do. I'm always challenging that person to do better.

2. He claims to be a very good cook, but I have never seen him cook anything.
3. John missed another day at work. Finally his employer decided to sack him.
4. After a successful interview, Mark was hired for the position of junior engineer.
5. Mark was offered a more interesting job at another company, so he decided to resign.
6. A recruitment agency can screen job applicants to make sure they match the company's requirements.
7. Many job applicants try to embellish their CVs/ résumés to improve their chances of getting the job.

1. _____ to say that something is true (although you cannot prove it)
2. _____ to dismiss somebody from a job
3. _____ to make something (e.g. a story, exam results) look better or more interesting than it really is
4. _____ to employ somebody to do a job
5. _____ to leave a job
6. _____ to successfully complete a university degree
7. _____ to test somebody to find out if there is something wrong with them

2 Find the information

Read the first four paragraphs of the article on the next page and complete the sentences.

1. _____ falsely claimed he had a computer science degree.
2. The PR boss of Manchester United claimed she had a first-class degree from _____ .
3. An executive of the InterContinental Hotels Group claimed he had two _____ from two universities.
4. He _____ before he was sacked.
5. There has been a _____ per cent rise in CV lies since the start of the financial crisis.

THE INDEPENDENT

Is it OK to lie on your CV/résumé?

The chief executive at Yahoo has been accused of lying about his qualifications - but he's certainly not the first.

Adapted from The Independent, by LUCY TOBIN, 10 MAY 2012

1. The board of Yahoo is discussing the future of its chief executive, after an investor accused him of lying on his CV. His crime? He falsely claimed that he had a computer science degree, as well as a degree in accounting, when he applied for the top job.
2. The Yahoo boss isn't the first and won't be the last person to be caught with a little white lie on the CV. In 2000, the PR boss of the football club Manchester United claimed on a CV that she had a first-class degree from Cambridge University. When she was hired, it turned out that in fact she had a second-class degree, and she was sacked.
3. The chief executive of the Asia-Pacific division of the world's biggest hotels firm, InterContinental Hotels Group, claimed he had two degrees - from Cornell University in the US and from Victoria University in Australia. In fact, he attended classes, but he did not graduate from either university. He resigned before he was sacked. CV trickery is a growing problem, according to Sal Remtulla, director of employee screening at Risk Advisory, a major consultancy group.
4. "We've seen a 20 per cent increase in CV lies since the start of the financial crisis," she said. "It is more difficult to get jobs. People are finding it difficult to meet companies' tough requirements and they are lying on their CVs.
5. "The Yahoo boss is absolutely typical of the people we're screening," Ms Remtulla added. "Even mid-managers who are in their 40s still feel it is necessary to embellish their school exam results. We've also seen an increase in cases where people buy degrees on the internet. It makes our life interesting."
6. A wider choice in higher education has made CV lies easier, according to Paul Palmer of Cass Business School.
7. "The growth in degrees, particularly at the new universities, has made it much more difficult to track education histories," he said.

   According to Risk Advisory, one candidate invented a school, designed its own website and provided a phone number with a fake school secretary!
8. Firms are fighting back with aptitude and psychometric tests on top of interviews and CVs. And there is more demand for pre-employment screenings.
9. "Recruitment may be lower, but companies are still hiring and they want the right - honest - people," Ms Remtulla said.

   "There's no difference between an accountant or IT worker or medical professional lying about a qualification. People are relying on your advice, and you may not be qualified to provide it. CV lying is unethical. It hurts the people who have worked hard and really have those qualifications, and it gives an understanding of someone's character too.

   "People who lie on their CV should be sacked. You wouldn't trust them. If they can lie once, they can lie again."

3 Find the words

Read the full text and find a word or phrase which means:

1. A harmless or trivial lie (P2) _____
2. difficult (adj., P4) _____
3. follow (verb, P7) _____
4. not real (adj., P7) _____
5. tests to find out if people have a natural ability to do a job (noun, P8) _____
6. not morally acceptable (adj., P9) _____

4 Checking understanding

Answer the questions below:

1. Why are more people lying on their CVs?
2. Why has it become easier to lie on your CV?
3. How are firms trying to deal with this problem?
4. Why is lying on your CV unethical according to Sal Rentulla of Risk Advisory?
5. Why should liars be sacked according to Ms Remtulla?

5 Lie detector game

Write down four false and four true sentences about:

- your qualifications
- your education
- you employment history
- reason for leaving your last job
- your responsibilities at your last job
- other skills (e.g. languages, certificates, etc.)

Try to use structures such as:

I have a degree in ... I graduated from ... I did a course in ... I hold a certificate in ... I resigned because ... I was responsible for ... / It was my job to ... / My responsibilities included ...

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

.....

Now work in pairs. Take turns to read your sentences. Your partner should try to guess which sentences are true and which are lies.

6 Talking point

Discuss any of the following questions

1. Is it OK to lie on your CV? Why/why not?
2. Should employers or agencies always screen job applicants?
3. How does your company recruit new staff?

Key

1. Vocabulary - recruitment

In sentence 7, point out the difference between the terms CV (British English) and résumé (US English).

1. claim
2. sack
3. embellish
4. hire
5. resign
6. graduate
7. screen

2. Find the information

1. The chief executive of Yahoo
2. Cambridge University

5. 20

3. Find the words

1. a white lie
2. tough
3. track
4. fake
5. aptitude tests
6. unethical

4. Checking understanding

1. Because the financial crisis has made it more difficult to find a job and meet company requirements
2. Because of the wider choice in higher education/ growth in degrees
3. They are using aptitude and psychometric tests and demanding more pre-employment screening.
4. People rely on your professional advice. It also hurts the people who have worked hard for their qualifications.
5. They can't be trusted.

5. Lie detector game

If students have done the worksheet 'Company and job', this activity will provide a good opportunity to review the expressions for talking about one's duties and responsibilities. Students should try not to make it easy for their partners to guess the lies. Try to pair up those who don't know each other very well.

3 Find the information

You are going to read an article about how modern companies are motivating their staff. Answer the questions below with the ideas from Exercise 1.

1. Which idea does The Times newspaper use to motivate staff?
2. Which idea does Tatler use to increase productivity?
3. What do companies need Aroma Co for?
4. Which device motivates staff and also has health benefits?
5. What does Google offer to motivate staff?

Bosses are inventing surprising ways of making us work harder.

The special devices that companies use to motivate staff

Adapted from The Independent, by Gillian Orr, 27 August 2014

1. Journalists at the UK's 'The Times' newspaper received a surprise this week when the noise of old-fashioned typewriters was heard in the newspaper's new offices. But it's not just nostalgia that has inspired this. It is suggested that the extra noise will increase energy levels and help reporters to meet deadlines.
2. We shouldn't be surprised. Offices these days are filled with little devices designed to motivate staff. Another publication, Tatler, operates a clear-desk policy. Sure, it may look pleasing, but according to a survey by the National Association of Professional Organisers, having more space on desks can also increase productivity by up to 30 per cent.
3. And if an office has a very pleasant smell, then it's very possible that it's there on purpose. Companies such as Aroma Co regularly perfume offices in order to stimulate the workforce. And the sweet smell of success? Lavender will relax employees, lower stress levels and reduce absenteeism.
4. In-office doctors are certainly convenient and they have also reduced the number of staff members who take days off.
5. Treadmill desks are becoming more popular. They offer lots of health benefits and also boost job performance, according to the University of Minnesota's Carlson School of Management. But after all that walking, workers are certainly going to want to lie down. However, research suggests that bosses should encourage them to rest. Although it might seem like a bad idea, a short nap is an excellent way to motivate employees.
6. Silicon Valley is leading the workplace revolution. With their slides, games rooms, arcade machines and endless free snacks (especially at Google), their workplaces look like adult theme parks.
7. But is it all just a way to attract the best applicants and make sure workers rarely leave the office? Or do these machines and devices actually increase productivity?
8. Alison Price, a psychologist and author, believes that workers who enjoy their office environment are likely to work harder. "It's positive psychology. There is a lot of evidence that happy employees are more productive," Price says. "They are also more creative, generate more sales and are less likely to take time off."
9. Of course, the tech industry has plenty of cash to spend on these things. Smaller companies should just remember that, according to Price, a sincere "good job" from the boss is certain to boost an employee's productivity.

4 Phrases from the text

What are the benefits of the ideas and devices mentioned in the article? Complete the phrases below with the infinitive form of verbs from the text:

1. _increase_ energy levels (P1)
2. _____ deadlines (P1)
3. _____ staff (P2)
4. _____ stress levels (P3)
5. _____ absenteeism (P3)
6. _____ job performance (P5)
7. _____ the best applicants (P7)
8. _____ more sales (P8)

5 Checking understanding

Read the rest of the article and put 'T' (True) or 'F' (False) next to the statements below. Explain why the false statements are wrong.

1. Having the sound of typewriters in a modern office is only about nostalgia.
2. Having a clear desk can increase productivity by up to 50%.
3. The smell of lavender makes employees less stressed and less absent.
4. In-office doctors increase productivity.
5. Bosses should not allow employees to lie down at work.
6. Silicon Valley is changing the look of modern workplaces.
7. Employees who enjoy their workplaces do not work very hard.
8. Happy employees are more creative and make more money for the company.
9. Smaller companies can increase an employee's productivity without all these expensive devices.

6 Find the word

Find a word or phrase in the text which means:

5. people who apply for a job (plural noun, P7) _____
6. stop working temporarily because of some reason, e.g. illness (phrase, P8) _____

7 Prediction and speculation

Various structures and verb forms are used in English to speculate about and predict things. Look at the following sentences from the text and match them to the correct structure below.

1. Having more space on desks can also increase productivity by up to 30 per cent.
2. And if an office has a very pleasant smell, then it's very possible that it's there on purpose.
3. Workers who enjoy their office environment are likely to work harder.
4. It is suggested that the extra noise will increase energy levels and help reporters to meet deadlines.
5. But after all that walking, workers are certainly going to want to lie down.
6. A sincere "good job" from the boss is certain to boost an employee's productivity.

a. be certain to + infinitive
b. be going to + infinitive
c. be likely/unlikely to + infinitive
d. can + infinitive
e. It's possible/unlikely that ...

B: We could offer you $2.50 per unit. How does that sound?

D. 3
A: What are your _____[4]?
B: 20 days after delivery.
A: That is too strict for us. Other suppliers have offered us 30 days. Can you be more flexible?
B: OK, you can have 30 days.

D. 4
A: What is your standard _____[5]?
B: About 3 weeks.
A: That's quite long. We would need about 2 weeks.
B: I'm afraid that's too short for us.

Listen to check your answers. Can you think of any other aspects of a product or service that might be discussed during a negotiation?

2 Negotiation positions

Negotiations involve several strategies. Match the following expressions with their correct definition:

1. make a concession	a. to agree to a suggestion
2. reach an agreement	b. to allow the other side to have something they want in order to end a disagreement
3. accept a proposal	c. to arrive at a position that both sides accept
4. reject a proposal	d. to arrive at a position where both sides reduce their demands in order to agree
5. reach a compromise	e. to refuse to agree to a suggestion

Now study the negotiations in Ex. 1 again and label each dialogue with the expressions above.

3 Talking point

4. Negotiation dialogue

A: So, what is your unit price?

B: Our unit price is $5 for orders up to 2000 units.

A: $5 is a bit high. We were looking at around $4.

B: I'm afraid that's not possible. This is the standard deal for new customers.

A: Well, what are your terms of payment?

B: 30 days after delivery.

A: We could pay within 2 weeks if you gave us a small discount of 50 cents per unit.

B: OK, we can agree on that. Now, on to the question of delivery. What sort of delivery time were you expecting?

A: Around 15 days maximum.

B: We usually require 20 days. We would be prepared to offer you 15 days, provided that you increase your minimum order from 1000 to 1500 units.

A: That would be very difficult for us. The maximum would be 1250 units.

B: OK, we can accept that. So, that's it then. We will supply you a minimum of 1250 units at $4.50 per unit to be delivered within 15 days. Terms are 14 days after delivery.

A: Sounds fine. It's a deal!

THE INDEPENDENT

Thirsty Work: The coffee shop as office

Coffee shops are the unofficial offices of an army of modern workers thanks to free wi-fi and caffeine on tap.

1. The bond between coffee and work is strong. For a long time, it has been the traditional drink for employees in offices. Workers who drink coffee have alert brains and are ready to deal with the tasks of the day.
2. The first company to allow employees a coffee break was the American chair manufacturer Barcalounger, in 1902. Since that time, coffee has become an important part of the working day. The drink is so important that in the past, workers even threatened to strike when bosses tried to stop their coffee breaks (as happened at Chrysler in 1964).
3. Today there are around 10,000 coffee shops in the UK in a market worth about 5 billion pounds, and the number of them is growing. People do work in coffee shops, attracted by the free wi-fi that many now offer. Since the start of the recession, they have become a safe place for the self-employed.
4. Freelance writer Louisa Gregson says: "Working from home has many advantages but it can be an alienating experience. Although you can avoid office politics, you lose the daily interaction of working with others." Laptops and coffees have combined rather well, it seems. Although a noisy coffee shop may appear to be a distraction and suitable only for those who want a change of scenery for a few hours, they can make people work harder. "There is some feeling that you are on public show. You have made a trip to the coffee shop in order to work so you feel that it is your duty to focus," says academic and writer Cathy Hume. "You can be unexpectedly more focused than at home."
5. Instead of discouraging people from using their tables for long periods of the day, some coffee shops invite this behaviour. Costa Coffee in the UK offers free wi-fi in branches where it feels people will want to work. The company believes the coffee shop environment is more formal and professional than using a home office. "There are no strict rules to working in a Costa, although we appreciate it if customers buy products from our stores while using our facilities," says Kevin Hydes, head of UK marketing.
6. Starbucks responded to falling sales a few years ago by redesigning some of its shops to better cater for business users. At its Conduit Street branch in London, customers frequently hold meetings, interviews and business lunches. During the week, the downstairs area of the branch is usually a sea of laptops.
7. "We've seen a big increase in the number of people using the internet in our stores, to research and write books and start their own businesses," says Brian Waring, Starbucks' vice-president of marketing and category.
8. Recently, however, some American cafes have started to complain. The trend of working and holding business meetings in coffee shops emerged in the late 1990s in the US. Americans have got used to turning up at a cafe, ordering a coffee and opening up their laptops. Squeezed by the recession and noticing that some customers were buying a single coffee and then using up space and power, more and more independent cafes have begun to rethink their strategy.
9. "I've heard all the negatives: freeloaders, rent-free office space, free internet, customers sitting for hours with one cup of coffee and so on. These things are true, but are they necessarily negative?" asks Janice Pullicino, owner of Naidre's Cafe, in Brooklyn.
10. Getting the right working environment is not easy. "Coffee shops can be good places for meetings, but only if there's the right level of noise – too noisy and it's unprofessional, too quiet and you feel very conspicuous," says Judy Heminsley, who runs the website workfromhomewisdom.com.

1 Warm-up

What is a co-operative?

2 Key words

Match the following words with their correct definitions:

1.	a warehouse	a.	additional time at work
2.	a perk	b.	a fixed regular payment that a worker receives
3.	wage	c.	a large building in which goods are stored
4.	the bottom line	d.	an extra thing that you have in your work, e.g. a laptop or a car
5.	staff	e.	effort and motivation to achieve a goal
6.	overtime	f.	employees
7.	drive (noun)	g.	the most important thing to consider, usually the company's net profit

3 Reading

You are going to read an article about a British co-operative. Read the statements below and put 'T' (True) or 'F' (False) next to each statement. Then read the text to check your answers.

1. The co-operative hire a catering company to prepare lunch.
2. Everybody receives the same salary.
3. Profit is the bottom line.
4. Staff work fixed hours.
5. Managers control the business.
6. Staff receive a low wage.
7. Staff work very hard.

THE INDEPENDENT

Workers' co-operatives

One for all, all for one.

1. It is lunchtime at Suma Wholefoods' distribution warehouse. While most workers across Britain are preparing to eat an overpriced sandwich at their desks, the 140 staff of the British co-operative are waiting for a plate of hot food.
2. At Suma, free lunch is a perk of the job. Meanwhile, as with all the other tasks in the company, staff members take turns to cook and serve vegetarian food to their colleagues as well as wash up after them.
3. It is one of the most desirable jobs in the organisation, says Paul Collins, a 50-year-old former music-business executive who has worked for the company in various roles including marketing and warehouseman, for the past 10 years.
4. All members at Suma, the UK's largest workers' co-operative, receive the same salary, although many choose to earn less by working part-time. Earlier this year, staff voted themselves a 5 per cent pay increase.
5. But Suma is about more than numbers. "We have a triple bottom line – that's people, planet and profit," Collins says. In other words, Suma is an ethical organisation which values its customers (mainly small independent retailers) and its members first, rather than faceless shareholders or a small number of rich owners.
6. This means that staff enjoy seven weeks of holiday a year and incredibly flexible working. There is unlimited paid overtime available and a generous final salary pension. It's not surprising that when the company advertised for new members recently, 600 people applied.
7. But perhaps the most unusual thing is the fact that there is a completely flat management structure. Richard Hizzard, 46, who works in sales, says that people often find this hard to understand. "When people start, they look for a boss. They say, where is the director? But we are all self-managed and we inspire each other," he says. "It is a strange concept, but clearly it works."
8. Matt Pinnell, 50, has been a member since 1986. He says, "The reason we have survived, compared with other co-operatives in the 1970s and 1980s, is because we make a profit and pay a decent wage. Small co-ops can be like small businesses, where people work 80 or 90-hour weeks, killing themselves and paying themselves very little. We decided that wasn't the way to go."
9. "I have spoken to a lot of business consultants who say, 'you could cut your costs and improve your efficiency'. We always listen to them, but often we simply don't want to work like that," he adds. He agrees that some people might not want to work at Suma because of the "lack of prospects", but he says members prefer a higher quality of life.
10. "Most people here lack the intense, ambitious, classic capitalist drive. They enjoy being part of this enterprise but they are not motivated by more promotion, more status or more money, although we are still a very profitable company," he says. With no managers, Suma staff are able to be extremely honest. Most admit that decision-making can be slow, but believe that because all employees can express an opinion, when a decision is made, it is normally the right one.
